Farewell Great Britain - anew onto Splendid Isolation

Let us look forward and heal were we all jointly failed in the past and let us stay friends supporting each other as best as we possibly can. Let us keep all doors open for new ideas of better cooperation. Let us not loose each other so that sometime maybe more wiser we come again together better and who know's even maybe more closely

BREXIT from February 1st finally is a fact. The EU has lost a most important and respected member.

No sense for anyone to look around for whom to blame.

Surely there are people, on whichever side of the Channel, who wish to take revenge. Such is only destructive and bad guidance for any actions even some few might always profit well also from disruption and destruction.

Both sides, the EU with its remaining and future member states as well as Great Britain must do five things well:

One is to respect BREXIT, to be conciliatory and to put it behind all of us simply as an accomplished fact.

Two is to adjust to the BREXIT fact, no revenge politics but to fairly look forward and in friendship to successfully cope with the challenges ahead.

Three is to learn from the BREXIT lesson i.e. comparable future votes should require always a qualified quorum or fail.

Four are reforms leading to more attractive and convincing politics.

Five is to ensure economic stability as prerogative of political stability and peace.

BREXIT is legal. People legitimately are for it and against it.

It is something new and some kind progressive. It is an experiment nobody controls and no one can predict.

Only history shall judge its effects, its failures and its true value.

Many people fear it is destructive and shall bring more negatives than good.

Others hope that it provides new chances and therefore will work out constructively and positive allowing sooner or later better life.

Whichever way it goes BREXIT affects the people in the EU and Great Britain one way or the other and after BREXIT has become a fact we all should do our best to make it a success. If we allow negatives from BREXIT it will be bad for all of us. The people in Great Britain should not suffer from BREXIT but hopefully find their next level political concept to be successful.

In Great Britain as well as in the EU, separately but also as much as possible jointly, we all should look forward positively and continue to cooperate on a new level constructively for mutual benefits. We must be successful in our co-existence. Anything less would be irresponsible.

In the UK as well as in the EU we all should pray that Britain's chosen New Splendid Isolation really shall be as splendid and works out as hoped for.

Farewell Great Britain wishing our people to always remain happy and good friends. Dirk P. Schneider
